WELCOMING REMARKS

I extend a very warm welcome to the participants in the 17th International Conference hosted by Korean Economic Association.

The theme of this year's conference is "Globalization and Structural Changes in Korean Economy". Korean economy had grown rapidly between 1968 and 1991 without declining trend and then entered the transition path toward long run steady state of low growth. It is now considered to be in the steady state where the potential growth rate of per capita income is below three per cent. Korea has hitherto never experienced such a slow growth.

The structural changes of Korean economy from a developing economy to an advanced one have taken place in less than fifty years. When it was growing fast, the structure of the economy might not matter so much as in the long run steady state. Korean economy has to be reformed to prepare for slow growth in the future. Most of all, many unnecessary regulations have to be removed. Flexibility in labor market has to be achieved for easier hiring and firing. Korea has used too much resources in private education and lacked young workers' job preparation.

However, I am optimistic overall about the future of Korean economy. Although the reform will be slow, it will be done. I am also optimistic about the advancement of economic research in Korea. I am sure that this conference will be helpful in these respects. I would like to thank all participants this year. I wish you an enjoyable conference.
